Violence, unless it is promptly suppressed and the perpetrators properly punished, leads to more violence.

More violence leads to anarchy.

Anarchy breeds revolution.

Justice knows neither friend nor foe.

Revolution destroys governments and paralyzes industry. here is no occasion for revolution in this country, and there is no excuse for violence.

Organization on the part of the laboring classes is essential to their well being. Without it they might be ground down by capital to starvation wages, and would be without the means to bring their families up in the proper manner and educate them for useful careers in the world.

But no organization, whether of labor or capital is greater than our country and its laws. Those laws were made to be obeyed by all people, and no one is immune from their application.

No public official can expect to remain in office long without the confidence of the people, and that confidence endures only through a fair and impartial enforcement of law.

No organization can expect to retain the confidence or sympathy of the people unless its membership respects and obeys the laws under which all of the people are required to live.

If the sane and law abiding element of an organization is owerless to prevent acts of lawlessness or violence in their conmual disputes, then the constituted authorities should put an ed the place. nd to it without further ado.

It is doubtful, however, if we see such a day until some great upheaval or disaster has knocked a reasonable degree of reasoning and sense into heads that now seem to be practically devoid

Our courts and civil authorities, however, show less business acumen than do our corporations.

Such a condition of affairs is totally without reason or justice.
